EDITORIAL

To take on China, boost local defence capabilities

India and China are currently engaged in a low-intensity opaque war (LIOW), and renewed tension has been reported in recent days along the already troubled Line of Actual Control (LAC). These developments have taken place at the southern bank of the Pangong Tso and New Delhi has charged Beijing with attempting a second "provocative action" on August 31, even as talks were being held at the local military commanders' level. Pre-emptive action by Indian troops has evidently foiled any further Chinese intrusions. China has displayed lack of sincerity and engaged in deception. The steady build-up of troops and related inventory by both sides is indicative of heightened military tension, with a probability of skirmishes leading to unintended escalation, and a long winter vigil. For India, the monitoring and safeguarding of the claim line along LAC with China will demand a higher level of sustained military presence.

Against this backdrop, Prime Minister (PM) Narendra Modi's address, at the end of August, on defence manufacturing acquires critical salience, particularly for the candid manner in which the inadequacies and structural flaws of equipping India's military machine were highlighted. He noted, "It is not hidden from anybody that India has been one of the main defence importers in the world for the last several years. When India became Independent, it had huge capabilities in defence production. There was a well-established 100-year-old ecosystem in defence production in India. Not many countries had the resources and potential of India. But it is unfortunate that not much attention was paid on this issue for several decades. No serious attempts were made. But, the situation is changing now".

The PM's statement merits scrutiny in relation to how India will manage the China factor in the long-term from a military perspective. He was right when he referred to a 100-year-old ecosystem since India's first gunpowder factor was set up in Ishapur (Bengal) in 1787 and a modern rifle factory was established by the British in 1904.

Slowly, a defence production base was created in India, but only to serve the imperial interest. During World War II, the Indian contribution was considerable by way of war goods — but they were at the lower end of the spectrum and included ammunition, clothing, footwear, animals, among other items. When the British left India in 1947, this production infrastructure was denuded of its critical human resource and funding; further, it was irrevocably fragmented due to Partition. Lethal stores were destroyed and platforms such as bomber aircraft damaged and rendered non-operational.

So the PM's suggestion that India inherited "huge capabilities" apropos defence production at the time of Independence is not accurate. But the PM was spot on that while India had the potential to build a defence industrial base, it was "unfortunate" that no serious attention was paid to this strand of national capability for decades. The onus for this omission lies with those entrusted with the higher defence management. There has been no dearth of reports and recommendations about how to fix the problem but the under performance of the Indian defence manufacturing ecosystem has been overwhelming. That India is among the world's largest importers of arms is a shameful reality, and it is to the PM's credit that he had acknowledged this fact in his first term (2014) and had sought to enhance the indigenous production of military inventory. However, the empirical truth is that, six years later, the 100-year-old "ecosystem" that the PM referred to has not enabled or nurtured any significant progress in the indigenous design and manufacture of military inventory. The most stark indicator is that India is still floundering with the basic personal weapon for the soldier — the Kalashnikov equivalent — and is dependent on Russia for this item. Modi 2.0 has another four years to pick up the military equipment gauntlet, and having a full-time defence minister in the seasoned Rajnath Singh is positive. India has to invest in design and research and development in a far more sustained and effective manner, and not succumb to short-term measures such as urgent imports when there is a crisis.

Delhi to get back into high spirits: Restaurateurs elated to serve Delhi. The news that Delhiites will now again be able to indulge in a glass of aged wine, or a sparkling mojito has made both the foodies and restaurateurs quite high! Hotels, restaurants and clubs in the national capital have been permitted to serve liquor from September 9, on a trial basis. "I feel this is a really good decision since liquor has already been available at retail shops, and people have been coming out to dine at restaurants where they do miss later. As long as people are sensible and keep safety in mind, I think we can all start getting back to a normal life," says Abhiram Bidwai, owner, La Cantine Kitchen and Bar, Vasant Kunj, adding, "Liquor service for restaurants is necessary in more ways than one. It not only forms a major chunk of sales but also makes for a complete meal experience."

Restauranteur Priyank Sukhija, who owns Lord Of The Drinks and Tamasha, welcomes the move adding, it "should have happened sooner." He feels, "It's easier to serve beer, than make a mocktail! Opening up liquor services will save a lot of restaurants from shutting down, and will incentivise those who have shut shop, to reopen. For four months we had zero sales. In the last month, since we opened, we have been running on 7-10% of our pre-covid revenues. With alcohol, we expect the number to go up to 30-40%." Delhiites who love alcohol are on cloud nine since this announcement.

Claim vehicle insurance faster than you can change tyres

Ahmedabd, Bang a vehicle and the immediate thought that crosses the owners mind is the costof repairand how long would the vehicle be held at the garage. During testing times like that of COVID-19 outbreak, one even gets anxious that safety would have to be thrown out of the door to steer past an insurance claim. Pankaj Arora, Managing Director & CEO at Raheja QBE General Insurance Company Said "If you are paranoid at the thought of insurance office visits and the number of people you would have to get in touch with, then calm down. Not just groceries, but insurance claims too have been delivered contact-free. Be it collisions while moving loved ones back home or vehicle damage when catastrophes struck, insurance claims have been redefined due to the digital architecture. Pankaj Arora, Managing Director & CEO at Raheja QBE General Insurance Company Said The added advantage has been that end-to-end claim processing time has been dwarfed by simplest of repair timelines. Notifying an insurance claim, assessment of the damaged claim approval today can be done faster than one can swap a flat tyre." The days of wait for an insurance surveyor to take a physical note of the vehicle damage are now defunct. Digitally-assisted claims are the new normal, where a car or a two-wheeler owner merely needs to stream a video to inspect the vehicle damage. This can be done even without an application sitting on your phone. (19-10)
